"I love hearing from past clients and receiving referrals. There's no better feeling than knowing that I have successfully completed a job and that my clients not only are satisfied with my performance, but are eager to share their experience with others."

Real estate and interior design have always worked in tandem, but in recent years, as the cultural appetite for interior design has increased, the relationship has gone from a friendly handshake to a warm embrace. With this in mind, Brooke Burton, a licensed real estate professional for over 8 years, recently received her Interior Design Certification from the University of Miami. "I love not only helping my clients find their perfect space but also helping them to turn that space into a home," she says. Presently, she works almost exclusively on luxury development leasing at Panorama Tower. "I've been proudly working in-house for Florida East Coast Realty (FECR) for nearly 4 years, and it has been incredibly rewarding," she says. "Located in the heart of Brickell, Panorama is the peak of chic luxury rental living in Miami." In keeping with the times, she has also embraced technology in new ways. "More and more people are renting remotely, sight-unseen because they need to relocate and are not able to travel in advance," she says. "At Panorama Tower, we have seen an influx of renters from the Northeast mostly, many of whom we have helped through virtual tours and online leasing." A people-person, animal lover and Miami native, Burton knows the city like the back of her hand.

Brooke's Adjectives: "I'm dedicated, sincere and proactive."

Chosen Career: "I've been drawn to beautiful spaces and architecture, and I knew early on that I wanted to go into real estate. I enjoy the diversity of the field, combining my love for interior design, homes and working with people."

COVID Changes: "We use a completely paperless system at Panorama Tower, from beginning to end, and have been conducting numerous virtual tours."
